INTRODUCTION.

The series of pictures contained in this album, illustrating various phases of our anti-plague work in Fuchiatien (Harbin), has been published in response to the request of several kind friends, both Chinese and Foreign, who have shown considerable interest in the work there. The first case of plague was detected on the 7th day of the Chinese tenth moon, and for some weeks ran a mild course, the cases seldom reaching more than three daily. Then it took a serious turn for the worse, and the death-rate rapidly rose until its highest point—173—was reached on Jan. 28th. By that time, the organisation, which had taken one whole month to prepare because of the extremely cold weather and the want of suitable buildings, was completed. The city was divided into four sections, each with its own disinfecting station, staff doctor, assistant doctors, students, coolies, sanitary police, ambulances and disinfecting carts. Each section sent out four-six search parties, every house in the district was visited each day, the sick were removed to hospital, the "contacts" to the quarantine wagons, and the houses, wherever possible, were disinfected, the dirtiest ones being sealed up and marked down for burning afterwards. Communication between the four sections was prohibited except to a few with special passes, and the outskirts of the city were surrounded by 1,100 soldiers. In this way, the rescue work gained a fresh impetus, and the mortality decreased rapidly, so that by Feb. 28th, exactly a month after the date of the highest point, it fell down to nil. In submitting this album to the learned members of the International Plague Conference, I wish to express, on behalf of the Chinese Delegation, the hope that they may each accept a copy as a small souvenir of their great kindness in coming here to find a means whereby this Pneumonic Plague, perhaps the most deadly of epidemics known, may be stamped out in future.

Mukden, April 1st, 1911.
